Description

Students working as Interns for the University of Arizona’s Community and School Garden Workshop will work with instructors to support the participation of UA students in the development of the Tucson community through organized collective action for a more sustainable world. Interns will consistently be involved with a Tucson school or community garden as well with its staff, students, and/or community members. In addition to their contributions to their garden or school, interns will also have many opportunities to write and create curriculum related to sustainability, food safety and production, and geography.

Possible Responsibilities Include:

- Writing Eco-Literature
  - Planning lessons around gardening and literature
  - Participating in other gardening lesson plans
  - Providing weekly reports on a designated garden site
  - Creating a one-page poster detailing significant contributions to the project

Qualifications

This internship is open to Juniors and Seniors majoring in English or Creative Writing who have a strong interest in sustainability. Other qualities that may be helpful include:

- The ability to operate effectively in a group setting.
- A strong grasp of how individuals are able to contribute to their communities.
- The ability to identify opportunities to support the garden at an assigned site and plan.

To learn more about the Internship Opportunities go to http://sgdschoolgardens.arizona.edu/participate