Internship Opportunities

Thank you for your interest in volunteer and internship possibilities with the Tucson Museum of Art. We have many opportunities for those adept at the English language. While a picture does indeed paint a thousand words, sometimes we actually just need those thousand words. Please have a look at the possibilities below and feel free to contact me.

--Michael Fenlason

Grants and Proposals: We suspect that this will have some lasting value. As a former English major, I would have liked to know how to research and write grants coming out of college.

Creative Fiction and Non-Fiction: This opportunity might be a tad more enjoyable for you. We are putting together an online magazine that will feature stories, articles, and creative writing of all genres.

Public Relations, Marketing, Editing, and Whatnot: We often have the need for assistance in this area. As the Museum goes through a re-brand, we look toward using language in a way that’s more expansive and entertaining.
Who You Are?

You like to write. You have a distinctive voice, but you can also adapt to the material. You have some decent research skills. We suspect if you’re a university senior or junior you can use Google. A sense of humor is a plus. You are interested in trying something new. You are confident, but not annoyingly so. You have a few hours a week to spare. You’re creative, of course. You needn’t have a profound knowledge of art, but a passing interest wouldn’t hurt.

How We Work Together

As mentioned above, we have need for a number of writing opportunities. Working with our “younger” person’s group START (https://www.tucsonmuseumofart.org/start/) or one of our community partners like Strada Company (an arts-led, presenting organization, you can check them out here: http://www.stradacompany.org), will offer an array of opportunities largely with people not too much older than you. Generally, we like to have fun at the Museum. So, we don’t want this to be a dirge for you. We celebrate creativity and collaboration.

Just to the right of this sentence is the contact information you will need. If there is an internal process at the University, I suspect you will need to partner with Jamie C. Robertson. We look forward to hearing from you. We have approximately three opportunities, though publishing in our online magazine is particularly encouraged.

Again, thank you for your interest.

Michael Fenlason